Vicious Analogies.

Lynch law, we are told, is an example of what we would have under the initiative and with judges subject to the recall and as for the referendum, why, that is exemplified in "Give us Barabasi!" and Christ to the cross in Jerusalem of old. The analogy is not good. The first example is a case of instantaneous, immediate overwhelming passion. It involves nothing like a deliberate voting formulation of charges, weeks or months of discussion and finally a formal vote. Would any community deliberately vote a lynching? Never. As for the crucifixion of Christ, that was no referendum to deliberate popular judgement. Pilate threw Him to a mob inflamed against him by the scribes pharisees and priests—the ruling class. The people who had followed Christ were driven away by the soldiers. Judas was in the pay of the ruling class. The people proper were not consulted. Pilate was scared into giving Christ over to the executioners by those who threatened to ruin him at Rome. He was a judge not only yielding to the mob but forced to do so by special interests that had worked up the mob. The initiative, the referendum and the recall are sane, orderly, limited and defined processes of deliberate popular action and their operation would be more mob-like than election to which we are now accustomed.—The Mirror.

As to the Recall.

In his veto message on the statehood bill President Taft has much to say of the danger of unjust decisions from a judge desirous of pleasing a popular majority. He seems quite to overlook the possibility of other motives for unjust decisions than fear of the people. He overlooks the fact that the same judge who will decide unjustly for fear of a popular majority can be influenced just as easily if not more so by other causes to render unjust decisions when all cause to fear the majority has been removed. A judge who will decide unjustly in order that he may continue to draw an official salary, is the very kind that needs the threat of recall hanging over him, for he is necessarily the kind of judge that is susceptible to bribery. A man who will sell his convictions for a salary, will surely not hesitate to sell them for corporation bribes. A man whom the Recall can intimidate can be intimidated by powerful private interests. If we must have moral cowards on the bench, is it not better that fear of the people rather than fear of private interests influence them? If judges must be influenced by financial considerations, is it not better that the consideration be the salaries due them rather than bribes?—Benton County (Oregon) Republican.

JOB BAILEY has again resigned. Becoming affected with the spuncue, because his Democratic associates in Congress would not follow his leadership, he resigned his position as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The spuncue is said by physicians and scientists to be a political disease, nearly always fatal. Its primary cause is an inflamed gall bladder, resulting first in an attack of papsol, followed by the fanted. This combination terminates in the dreaded spuncue. There are only a few well authenticated cases on record of recovery from this disease, and even the exceptions are political paranolies for life. Theodore Roosevelt has been reported as having a slight attack of the same disease, but so serious a case
